Governments around the world are seriously working to fight human trafficking. This aroused great concern when the U.S. State Department published its 2011 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report in June. 36 annually since 2001, the TIP Report includes known cases of human trafficking in more than 175 countries, 37 for commercial sex, bonded labor, child labor, or child soldiers. It also pays attention to new legislation, how many people were accused of human trafficking and how many traffickers were punished. The State Department describes the TIP Report 38 a "tool" that can be used to deal with other countries on the issue of human trafficking. The report is collected with the help of embassies, non-governmental organizations, aid groups and individuals 39 have given data or their own personal accounts. 40, the report has become the world's most complete survey of modern day slavery. It also explores which ways are succeeding or failing in the fight against human trafficking.

The arctic fox lives farther north than any other foxes. They are well adapted for the cold harsh weather of the Arctic. The arctic fox can hunt lemmings that they can't see beneath the snow, but if an arctic fox can't kill enough to eat, it will settle for leftovers from other animals. They eat almost anything, including what polar bears have left behind. Arctic foxes can be either gray-blue or white. The blue color is not as common as the white. As summer begins, the arctic fox sheds its white coat for a brown one, perfect cover for summer. The change back to a winter coat occurs in September and October. By November the white winter coat is complete. Foxes of the blue coloring remain dark or charcoal colored all year but become a little lighter in winter.

Thousands of years ago, the top of a 12,000-foot-high volcano in the Cascade Range exploded. The large hole left behind became known as Crater Lake. It is in the center of a national park in southern Oregon that displays nature at its roughest and most powerful. Forests of towering evergreens and 2,000-foot-high cliffs surround the lake, where extraordinarily deep waters -- at 1,943 feet, are found. It's the deepest lake in the United States. If winter hiking and cross-country skiing aren't what you like, wait until early July to visit, when the roads have been cleaned up and the trails cleared. Rim Drive, a 33-mile road that surrounds the lake, has picture-perfect views from all sides. For a closer look, follow the mile-long Cleetwood Cove Trail to the shore. Brace yourself before diving in: The water temperature rarely rises above 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Besides, the laid-back mountain town of Bend, 112 miles away, makes a nice home base for a Crater Lake day trip.
